

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Welcome to the International Student Career Planning Guide. As an international student at Northwestern, you may have unique concerns or questions about how to successfully prepare for job searching in the United States (U.S.). This guide will provide tips and advice on how to navigate the U.S. job search process and share helpful resources.

This guide is a joint collaboration between multiple Northwestern offices:

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Self-Reflection and Values

As you begin the internship or job search process, it is important to reflect on your values and on the characteristics that are important to you in a professional opportunity. Here are some reflective questions to consider:

- What are your personal strengths, skills, interests, and values? Do they align with the jobs that you are interested in?
- Geographically speaking, where do you want to work? Short term? Long term?
- What industries are you most interested in?
- What are your work authorization options?

Use the table below to identify areas of importance and inform your job search. Rank your top 3 areas and fill in the blanks.
Factors to consider:

Location

Salary and Benefits

Travel

Company Mission and Values

Hybrid Work Schedule

Opportunities for Advancement

Must-Have (needs)	Could Live With (wants or compromises)	Deal Breakers (absolute no's)

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Job Search Planning Timeline

	Knowledge	Engagement	Strategy
Beginning of your Program	- Get to know your OISS adviser and the many resources they provide. - Understand the process of applying for work authorization (CPT* or AT*) for a U.S. internship and the process for applying for a Social Security Number. - Learn about resumes, interviewing, and other aspects of the U.S. job search.	- Meet with a career adviser to begin discussing your interests and career goals. - Experience U.S. networking, including building a LinkedIn profile or conducting informational interviews. - Attend recruiting events, such as career fairs and company events, to learn about companies and to gain experience speaking with U.S. employers. Discover opportunities on Handshake.	- Research companies in your areas of interest and understand recruiting timelines for your industries of interest. - Start applying for internships or other relevant experiences during your academic program. - Strategically network with employers and alumni.
Midway through your Program	- Understand the process of applying for post-graduation work authorization (OPT* or AT). - Explore alumni and networking resources (e.g., Northwestern Alumni Association, Northwestern Externship Program, Northwestern Mentorship Program, Our Northwestern).	- Attend recruiting events, such as career fairs and company events, to learn about companies and to gain experience speaking with U.S. employers. - Gain practice with mock interviews and talking about your skills and experiences. - Continue participation in networking, career workshops and meet with your career adviser.	- Continue applying for internships or other pre-graduation work experiences. - Utilize resources such as GoinGlobal, MyVisaJobs, Interstride, and LinkedIn to research companies that tend to hire international students. Interstride is a tool available for McCormick and Weinberg international students.
Conclusion of your Program	Speak with the OISS Adviser for more information about OPT processing times, and strategies for applying.	Follow up with previously established connections, including career fair contacts, networking contacts, or former internship supervisors to learn about potential opportunities.	- Apply for post-graduate work experiences in your areas of interest. - Apply for OPT 90 days prior to the date you intend to start working in the U.S., due to the processing time.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Networking and Community Building

Networking—the process of building and maintaining professional relationships—is essential for navigating the U.S. job market and workplace.

Think about how you learned about Northwestern. Whether through a counselor, alumnus, or event, you built connections to gather insights. Similarly, networking helps you gain support and information throughout your career.

Formal and Informal Networking

As a Northwestern student, you may be invited to attend formal networking or recruiting events hosted by the university or employers. Additional networking opportunities can be found by joining professional organizations, attending local/national conferences, or following your favorite companies or thought leaders on social media. Some of the platforms used to network are LinkedIn, Our Northwestern, and the Northwestern Network Mentorship Program.

Some of the best networking opportunities can also happen in informal spaces. Examples range from taking on leadership positions in student organizations to introducing yourself to a guest speaker after class.

Understand Networking Behaviors

Become familiar with common U.S. networking behaviors by reviewing eDiplomat. Common behaviors include: making eye contact and verbally initiating conversation, speaking positively about yourself, engaging in small talk/informal conversation.

Attending a networking event — even as an observer — can be useful in understanding these behaviors. If this sounds daunting, consider starting small by practicing networking with a career adviser, joining campus clubs, and attending events on-campus.

If English is not your primary language, it is common to be anxious about making grammar or vocabulary mistakes. Practice can help you overcome these anxieties. Refer to the English Language Communication Resources page in this guide for additional resources.

Conduct Informational Interviews

One of the easiest ways to initiate a conversation and start building a relationship is to ask for an informational interview. More information about informational interviews can be found in the NCA Career Guide's networking section.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

When Networking

- Focus on Relationship Building. It is important to remember that you are building long-term relationships. Networking is not a one-time transaction in which you ask for a job. It is our opportunity to meet and learn about somebody and their career story.
- Be Curious and Ask Questions. People enjoy talking about themselves, and you can learn a lot from their responses. Here is a sample list of questions to consider asking:
 - What is your background? Tell me more about your career path.
 - What does a typical day or week look like? What are your major responsibilities?
 - What do you enjoy most about your job? What's most challenging?
 - What are some of the benefits of being international at your (company)?
 - What can I do while I'm at Northwestern to prepare myself for a career in the industry?
 - How did you navigate finding work and sponsorship in the U.S.? (If the contact is a former international student)
 - Is there anyone else you'd recommend that I connect with to learn more?
- Tell your story. Your personal pitch/narrative is an introductory statement that succinctly summarizes your background. Prepare and practice your personal pitch/narrative. The following content is typically included:

Content	Example
Who you are	My name is Harman Argawal.
What you do	I am a senior majoring in chemical engineering at Northwestern University.
What makes you unique	This past year, I was one of three interns at XYZ Corporation in India where I designed a new piping configuration for our production facility.
What skills you have used	I used my critical thinking skills to examine the effects of possibly using this new configuration. As a result of my work, XYZ implemented this new piping system to drain their reactors more efficiently, saving time and money for the organization.
How you can make a positive impact	I would bring my problem-solving abilities and knowledge of chemical manufacturing to improve your organization's procedures.

*If you are unsure of what you want to do, you can still practice articulating your interests, skills, and goals. Meet with your Career Adviser to learn more about creating an elevator pitch.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

- Asking a Contact (NU Alumni, Professional, or Recruiter) for an Informational Interview. Once you have found a contact of interest, you then want to send a personalized informational interview request. Remember that your goal is to build professional relationships and network with professionals in your field of interest. Also, a personalized note is a great way to stand out from other requests.
 - Informational Interview Inquiry Sample. Dear Aisha, My name is Maria Hernandez and I am a first year Master's student at McCormick School of Engineering. I saw that you work as a Data Scientist at (company name). Coming from an international background, I'd love to connect with you to learn more about your background and gain any valuable insights. Are you free next week to connect for a 20-minute phone or virtual meeting? Thank you!
- Follow Up. One conversation isn't enough so plan to follow-up with those individuals. Ask for their business card or email so you can send them a thank you note and consider connecting with them on LinkedIn with a personal message. If you told them you would email them your resume, make sure you follow through. Periodically follow up with them by asking additional questions, sending updates on your progress at Northwestern, or sending interesting articles you've read that they may enjoy.
 - Follow Up Sample. Dear Snehal, I appreciate the time you took to meet with me today. Listening to your experiences as an international student has given me hope and I know with the right plan I will succeed. I look forward to what the future holds and I hope that I can follow up with you soon.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Preparing for Campus Recruiting

Career services offices at Northwestern facilitate student and employer interactions through Campus Recruiting. Campus Recruiting may include virtual or in-person interviews, information sessions, career fairs, and other events. Campus Recruiting provides the opportunity to have interactions with recruiters/alumni where you can introduce yourself, gather information, and make a good impression.

Information Sessions/Company Days: Employers send representatives to campus to present what the company does, internship/job opportunities and their recruiting process. This is an opportunity to learn employer-specific information. Be prepared to introduce yourself, ask questions, and get a business card.

Career Fairs: With help from your career adviser, develop your strategy for attending career fairs/events. Career fairs are one part of the internship/job search; not the only strategy.

Recommendations for Preparing for Campus Recruitment

☐ Meet with a career adviser early to discuss strategies for success and to learn about the timeline for your U.S. industry of choice.

☐ Learn how to use the online career management system for your school's career services office. Each system has unique opportunities for events, in addition to job postings.

Engineering Career Development	McCormick Connect Handshake
EPICS	Handshake
Medill Career Services	Handshake
NCA	Handshake

☐ Practice talking about yourself, and your goals, relevant skills, and achievements in a confident, self-promoting manner.

☐ Research relevant industries and employers. This will allow you to effectively ask and respond to questions.

☐ Understand how recruiting practices differ for undergraduate and graduate students

Recommendations for Preparing for Campus Interviewing

☐ Practice responding to potential interview questions, including making eye contact and speaking with enthusiasm.

☐ Research and prepare questions to ask the employer.

☐ Plan what you will wear while feeling free to maintain your ethnic/religious identity. 'Cats Closet' is a free resource if you are in need of interview attire.

☐ Adhere to interviewing policies for the designated career office. Be on time and professional throughout the interview process.

Resume & Interview Best Practices

➤ Resumes in the U.S. As you apply for U.S. job opportunities, it is important to convert your resume to a U.S. format. The NCA Career Guide \(PDF\) provides basic information on how to structure your U.S. resume. As you review the guide, consider these additional tips to market yourself and your unique experiences:

- Include your legal and chosen name so employers know how to address you. For example: Qianhui (Michael) Chen.
- Highlight any languages you speak in addition to English. Employers value multilingual language ability in candidates.
- Exclude personal data to inhibit bias and discrimination within the hiring process. Personal data includes: date of birth, age, gender, ethnicity, social security number, visa status, political or religious affiliation, photographs
- Exclude TOEFL scores.
- If you attended an institution within another country, list your GPA given by the school while also providing a U.S. equivalent GPA so employers can better understand your academic performance.

If you would like more assistance with developing your resume, please schedule an appointment with your career adviser.

➤ Interviewing for U.S. Companies. While employment expectations can differ in the U.S. regionally, culturally, and within industries, the following expectations and tips can generally be applied to virtual and in-person interviews. Review the NCA Career Guide \(PDF\) for more information.

- Be punctual: Arrive 10-15 minutes early for in-person and 5 minutes early for virtual.
- Show confidence: Discuss career goals, long-term plans, accomplishments, and skills.
- Prepare for questions: Be comfortable speaking directly about your contributions in past roles, classes, research, and projects.
- Maintain eye contact: It conveys confidence and interest.
- Handshake: It is customary to shake hands to introduce yourself. If this is contrary to your religious beliefs, you can decline.
- Research the company: This can help you communicate why you are interested in the opportunity.
- Be flexible: Interview styles can vary. For example, the interviewer may decide to start with small talk or may start with direct questions. Also, they may do most of the talking or expect you to do most of the talking.
- Follow up: At the end of the interview, ask about the next steps and when to expect feedback.
- Know your rights: It is illegal in the U.S. for employers to ask about age, race, sex, marital status, or past salary history.
- Get contact info: Ask each interviewer for their contact information before the interview concludes.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Generative Artificial Intelligence (AI)

Generative AI offers possibilities for professional development, from crafting resumes and cover letters to brainstorming career options to preparing for interviews. However, we encourage students to treat AI as a supplementary tool and maintain authenticity in their work. It is important to use your own ideas when sharing your interest in a position so that employers can hear your personal voice, understand your motivations, and assess your skills. By thoughtfully blending AI's suggestions with your unique perspective, you can maximize its benefits while minimizing potential risks. Also, always cross-check AI outputs for accuracy and avoid sharing personal identifying information to protect your data privacy. Remember that many AI tools draw on limited or outdated datasets, so verifying information with current, reputable sources is crucial. Below is a list of do's and don'ts when using AI for professional development:

Do's	Don'ts
• Use AI for brainstorming and drafts rather than the final product	• Over rely on AI outputs
• Incorporate your own ideas and voice	• Assume AI is always correct
• Personalize with your unique experiences	• Include personal identifying information in prompts
• Refine outputs with follow-up prompts, avoid general prompts	• Submit plagiarized materials

For specific prompts and examples to assist with career exploration, the job search, networking and customizing resumes, please see NCA's AI resource page.

Finding “International-Friendly” Employers

One challenging aspect of the U.S. job search is determining which companies hire international students for full-time jobs after graduation. Looking through job postings on national and local job boards can prove to be frustrating and time consuming.

Resources for Identifying “International-Friendly” Employers

Handshake

A Northwestern database you can use it to find job and internship opportunities, learn about career events, see which employers are coming to campus, and determine which employers are “international-friendly” by using search filters.

GoinGlobal

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Interstride

Online platform for international students to navigate the U.S. job market. It offers resources for job searching, networking, visa support, and career development, making it easier for students to connect with employers and succeed in their careers. Available for McCormick and Weinberg B.S./M.S./PhD students.

MyVisaJobs

A searchable H-1B visa database with a job board that posts international student-friendly job openings.

E-Verify Search Tool

E-Verify is a web-based system through which employers electronically confirm the employment eligibility of their employees. Use the E-Verify search tool to find employers who are currently enrolled in E-Verify.

Networking

Talk with your friends and classmates about their search and employer-related experiences. A simple conversation may be valuable in helping to uncover the potential of an employer/opportunity.

U.S. Employer's Perspective on Hiring International Students

Why wouldn't a U.S. employer simply fill available jobs with U.S. candidates? The answer is, there are many jobs in the U.S. that are difficult to fill because they require a particular skill set and a higher-level degree. In many cases, international students possess the desired skills and experience levels for these jobs and bring a number of other unique skills, including global perspectives, multilingual language abilities, and more. These reasons make international students a great fit for these and other jobs.

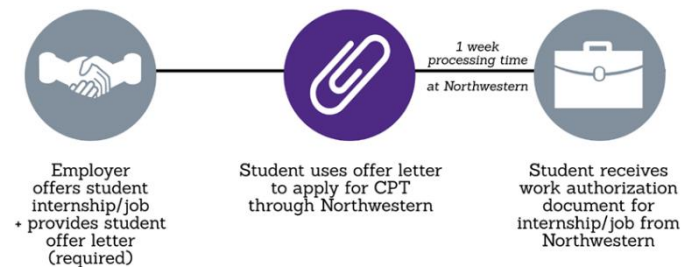

Work Authorization and Your Job Search

International Students are eligible to participate in a variety of work experiences, including on-campus employment, internships, research, and more, as long as you have secured the appropriate work authorization prior to beginning work. Working without authorization is a serious violation of your F-1 status and could result in termination.

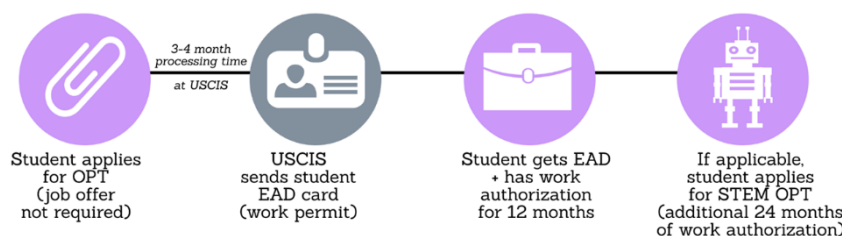

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Internships: While enrolled at Northwestern, F-1 students may be eligible for CPT and J-1 students may be eligible for AT. Verify whether you are eligible by visiting: Curricular Practical Training or Academic Training. CPT/AT is required for all off campus work including internships, practicums, cooperatives, jobs, gigs, volunteer work, or performances, paid or unpaid. If you are unsure if you need CPT or AT or have work authorization questions, please contact OISS. McCormick students are also welcome to contact their ECD adviser.

CPT (Curricular Practical Training)

OPT (Optional Practical Training)

Post-Graduation Jobs: After graduation, F-1 international students are eligible for 12 months of full-time work in jobs related to their field of study using Optional Practical Training (OPT). F-1 international students who completed a BS, MS, or PhD degree in a Science, Technology, Engineering and Math field are eligible for an additional 24 months of STEM OPT, making them eligible for a potential total of 3 years of work authorization. You can verify whether your program is STEM OPT eligible if you can find the CIP code listed on your I-20 on this list: STEM Designated Degree Program List. J-1 students should reach out to OISS to speak about Academic Training and eligibility.

If you are planning to pursue an internship or a post-graduate job in the United States, make sure you understand the procedures and policies around CPT and OPT. Become familiar with the requirements, application processes, and timelines for your particular academic program.

J-1 international students may be eligible for both internships and post-graduate work under a separate program called Academic Training. J-1 students should confirm their eligibility with the OISS office.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Responding to Work Authorization/Visa Questions on Job Applications

You will likely encounter questions about your visa status or eligibility to work in the U.S., because employers want to ensure they are hiring individuals who are legal to work. Additionally, there are certain types of employers (e.g. Government, Defense) that are only able to hire U.S. citizens for work.

It is important to know how to respond to these types of questions on applications so you are being honest about your eligibility for work, while also demonstrating that you are eligible for work with appropriate work authorization.

Common Job Application Questions

➤ “Are you legally authorized to work in the United States?”

International students are eligible for work authorization for both internships and post-graduation full-time roles. If you have done your research about work authorization types and know that you are eligible for either CPT, OPT or AT, you can typically answer “Yes” to this question.

If you are not sure about your eligibility or the process for receiving work authorization for the type of position you are applying to, you should do additional research before responding “Yes” to this question.

➤ “Will you now or in the future require sponsorship for an employment visa?”

In most situations, it is recommended that you answer this question with a “yes” as you will need sponsorship in the future. This rationale applies even if the opportunity is temporary, such as an internship, or if you are uncertain about wanting to remain in the U.S. after your CPT/OPT concludes. Consult your career adviser and OISS adviser for additional guidance on how to approach this question.

Responding to Work Authorization Questions While Interviewing or Networking

When interviewing or networking with employers, you should focus on your skills and competencies as they relate to the position. Do not approach an employer by immediately asking about sponsorship or “whether they hire international students.”

At some point during the interview process prior to the job offer stage, you and your prospective employer must have a conversation about work authorization and your eligibility to work. In advance of that conversation, do your research and understand which work authorization options you are eligible for. See the Work Authorization Elevator Pitch sample below.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Understand the requirements for employers, so that you can help the employer understand what they need to do. Typically, the requirements for CPT, OPT and AT on the employer side are minimal and Northwestern's OISS office handles most of the paperwork. The employer will just need to provide an official offer letter. There is no cost to the employer to hire a student under CPT, OPT, or AT.

Introducing your Work Authorization to Employers

Some employers are not familiar with work authorization for international students and may assume that it is quite complicated. You want to be prepared to advocate for yourself and clearly communicate the process to employers.

Below is a sample informational introduction you can use in situations where an employer asks about your ability to legally work in the U.S., and the work authorization process. While this sample is focused on finding an internship, it can be adapted for full-time work under OPT.

"As an international student, I am able to complete an internship using Curricular Practical Training, or CPT. This work authorization is something that my school will process and manage. As my employer, you would not need to complete any paperwork or pay anything for this service. If hired, the only thing that I would need from you is an offer letter confirming my position. Using CPT, I will be able to obtain a Social Security Number and work just like any other employee. If you or your HR department has any questions about how this process works, I can refer you to Northwestern's Office of International Student and Scholar Services."

Work Authorization Resources

Work authorization is managed through the Northwestern Office of International Student and Scholar Services (OISS). A comprehensive list of work authorization types and eligibility information is on the OISS website.

For specific questions regarding eligibility for work authorization or how to apply for CPT, OPT, or Academic Training, contact the OISS or see your OISS advisor.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Understanding U.S. Job Offers & Negotiating

Offer Letters

U.S. employers may extend a job offer verbally or through email. When receiving a job offer verbally or through email, request a formal offer letter before accepting the position. This will ensure that the information provided in the letter is consistent with the terms of employment discussed between you and the employer. You will also need this formal letter when you apply for CPT, OPT or AT.

Below is common information you will find within a written offer letter:

- Company name and address
- Position title
- Start date
- End date
- Number of hours of work per week
- Job duties
- Starting salary
- Benefits information (e.g. health, vacation, retirement)
- Employment eligibility and immigration status requirements

Job offer letters may also include information about bonus and commission structures, relocation assistance, tuition benefits, stock options and other details when applicable. Please review NCA's "Safety in your Search" to better understand warning signs of fraudulent opportunities and scams.

Negotiating Job Offers

Before accepting a job offer, take time to understand the terminology used within the offer letter. If you have questions about the language used or details about the offer, ask the employer directly or speak with an immigration attorney.

Once an offer is extended, the employer will often identify a preferred timeline for your decision. Timelines range from a day to more than three months; the most common is one to two weeks. If you feel pressured to make a decision, contact your career adviser.

Evaluate the job offer to ensure it meets your professional needs. Refer to the Self-Reflection and Values section of this guide for more assistance with this. You can negotiate with the employer to see what needs can be accommodated, including decision deadline, salary, location and start date. Review the negotiating a job offer section of the NCA Career Guide or speak with your career advisor for more help.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

Additional Considerations

➤ H-1B and Other Employment Visas

If you are working for an employer under post-graduate AT or OPT, including STEM-OPT, that employer has the option to pursue an H-1B visa, or other visa options, such as an L-1 Intracompany Transfer visa or an O-1 Extraordinary Ability visa, to allow you to continue work in the U.S. after OPT or AT. More information about various employment visas can be found on the Department of State's website.

You should have a conversation with your employer about their willingness to pursue an H-1B visa or other visa options at least 6 months before your OPT period ends, or earlier if you feel comfortable and have established a good working relationship.

Your employer should work with their HR Department or outside immigration attorney for more information about how to pursue an H-1B or other post-OPT visas.

➤ On-Campus Employment as an International Student

A Social Security Number (SSN) is required for any paid work in the U.S. On-campus part-time employment can be a great way to obtain your SSN. Securing a paid job on campus will help you compete for future work in the U.S. because some employers will only consider international students who already have an SSN.

F-1 International students can work on-campus for up to 20 hours per week without any additional authorization needed. J-1 students can also work on-campus for up to 20 hours per week but must be authorized by the OISS for all work before beginning. Please note, F-1 and J-1 international students are not eligible for work-study positions.

Part-time, on-campus - opportunities can be found through the Northwestern Work Study website. This website contains work study and non-work study positions. Check this site quarterly for new jobs that might interest you.

Below are a few examples of common on-campus employers and jobs:

- Athletics Learning Strategist/Study Skills Coordinator
- Alumni Relations and Development Phonathon Caller
- Research Assistant positions with Northwestern faculty. (Contact faculty whose research interests you; McCormick's students may also use Undergraduate Research Opportunities page)
- Northwestern Information Technology Student Employment Opportunities

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CAREER PLANNING GUIDE

English Language Communication Resources

While some employers may be concerned about an international student's ability to effectively communicate in verbal and written English, know that there are many different accents and ways to speak English and having Global English competency is an added value to any team.

Should you want to pursue additional resources for speaking and writing in English, Northwestern offers many on-campus resources:

	Undergraduate	The Graduate School	Other Graduate Programs
Speech Language & Learning (Professional Speaking)	X	X	X
ELP Foundations		X
English Development through Guided Exploration (EDGE)		X
English Language Programs	X	X	X
Integrated Academic Skills Program		X

There may be additional opportunities in your local neighborhood. Meet with your career adviser or OISS to explore the options.

Tips for Improving your English

- ☐ Spend time with English-speaking classmates, join an English-speaking club, or participate in customary U.S. activities.
- ☐ Read books, watch the news, movies, and popular shows. Doing so can introduce you to common conversational topics.
- ☐ Ask for feedback on your language skills from others who speak English for help with mispronounced words or misused idioms.
- ☐ Become a tutor. Explaining concepts in English to someone else will prompt you to ensure your pronunciation is correct, and to find alternative ways to explain things in English.
- ☐ Download the Duolingo app and continue practicing.
